Planets in April.

Saturn is the evening star, though only for a few days, and was the first place during the month on account of an important epoch in his course. This event is his conjunction with the sun on the 7th, after which he joins the morning stars. At this time Saturn, the sun, and the earth are in a straight line, with the sun in the centre. He is then at his greatest distance from the earth—more than ten hundred million miles—sets with the sun as the word "conjunction" indicates, and is invisible, being eclipsed by the solar radiance. Since 1876 Saturn has been below his average brightness, owing to the rings being seen nearly edgewise. But from the present time till 1885 he will constantly grow brighter, for, during this interval, he passes his perihelion, his point of greatest northern declination, and his rings open out to their widest extent. Those who have access to telescopes will enjoy matchless views of the most magnificent object in the solar system.

Observers with the naked eye will find great interest in watching his movements from the time when he emerges from his proximity to the sun and becomes visible as morning star, about a month hence, until he reaches his opposition in October, when he will be in his brightest phase, his seeming course around the sun being about half completed. Those who study the stars will have plenty of occupation in the coming years. The index hand on the celestial dial plate points to events of momentous import. The four great planets reach their nearest point to the sun more nearly together than they have done for almost two thousand years. It is not unreasonable to suppose that with their strong pull and pull all together they will create some unusual disturbance in the chaotic elements that make up the sun's fiery mass. The forces of the new epoch are now in active operation, and those who have closely watched the influence of the solar disturbance on climatic conditions predict a hot summer from the heat waves that follow the commencement of the tremendous solar outbursts. The hidden chambers of the great pyramid have given forth in oracular fashion momentous prophecies for 1881 to the few disciples who have faith in their teachings, and astrologers cast strange horoscopes from the unusual planetary combinations. Mesopotamia the celestial panorama unfolds its interesting scenes slowly and serenely before admiring and enraptured eyes. The disturbances that startle the finite powers of the human race are but as the dust of the balustrade in the order and harmony that rule in the realms of infinite space, and millions of years must elapse before the sun's fires cease to burn. Saturn sets now about 7; at the close of the month he rises about half past 4.

Jupiter is morning star, and will soon be an interesting object for observation as he comes his distance from the sun. He reaches his perihelion in September at nearly the time of opposition, so that he is coming nearer to us than he has been for more than eleven years, and will therefore be seen in his brightest phase in the summer and autumn months. On the 18th, Jupiter is near Mercury, and again on the 18th. On the 15th, Jupiter, Venus, and Mercury are near together, and possibly visible to bright-eyed observers. Jupiter rises now about half past five; at the end of the month he will rise about quarter before four, nearly an hour and a quarter before the sun.

Venus is morning star, with nothing specially noteworthy in his history during the month. She is approaching the sun and receding from the earth, and is shrouded by her brightest beams. On the morning of the 30th a beautiful planetary trio may be looked for, consisting of Venus, Saturn, and Mercury. They will be visible about an hour before sunrise. Venus rises now about five; at the end of the month about a quarter after four.

Mercury is morning star, and reaches his greatest western elongation on the 26th. He may be seen for a few days before and after that event, as it is one of the three favorable times during the year when he is visible to the naked eye as morning star. Mercury is an active member of the solar brotherhood during the month. He divides his attention between the moon and Jupiter on the 8th, stations on his declining node on the 9th, is stationary among the stars on the 10th, approaches Venus on the 15th, and Jupiter a second time on the 18th; is at his greatest distance from the sun on the 19th, and at his greatest western elongation on the 25th. This busy and swift-footed planet rises now about half past five; at the end of the month about a quarter before four.

Mars is evening star, and enjoys the distinction of being the only planet visible at night. He is leaving Aldebaran behind, and plunging into his headlong career among the smaller stars of Taurus and Gemini. On the 26th he will be directly north of the brilliant star Sirius. Mars sets now about a half hour after midnight; at the end of the month he sets about a quarter of an hour before midnight.

Uranus is evening star, but travelling so far away as to become a difficult object for naked eye observation. He keeps in the near vicinity of Rho Leonis, and a telescope will bring him both into the same field of vision, the star still shining like a brilliant point, and the planet being transformed into a young moon, with a disc of a delicate sea green tint. A fine opportunity is thus afforded for a study of the difference between an immeasurably distant star and a comparatively near planet—the one remaining a point under any magnifying power yet reached, the other as surely developing a disc.

The April moon falls on the 24th. The waxing moon is near Venus on the 7th and near Mercury and Jupiter on the 8th. The new moon of the 9th is near Saturn on the day of her change, near Mars on the 15th, and near Uranus on the 20th.

The interest of the month concentrates on the morning stars, for after the 7th Venus, Jupiter, Mercury, and Saturn are all numbered on this list. Venus especially will be the herald of the sun throughout the month, for though in her distant phase, she still reigns as the brightest star in the heavens. She will form a lovely picture as a companion for the slender waxing moon on the morning of the 7th, will divide her queenly favor between Mercury and Jupiter on the 15th, and will appear above the horizon line nearly at the same time as Saturn and Mercury on the 18th. Jupiter and Saturn will become studies of poetical interest from the present time till their opposition with the sun next October, when Jupiter, just after perihelion, will show his brightest colors, and Saturn will shine with clearer lustre than he has done for many years.—Proceedence Journal

MEDICINAL.
DR. TUTT'S
EXPECTORANT.
IN 25 CTS. AND $1 BOTTLES.

Its properties are Demulcent, Nutritive, Balsamic, Soothing and Healing. Combining all these qualities, it is the most effective LUNG BALM ever offered to sufferers from pulmonary diseases.

Dr. J. P. HAYWOOD, of New York, voluntarily indorses it. Read what he says: "Dr. Tutt's Dear Sir—During this year I treated nine hundred cases of lung diseases. In the lower wards of the city the cases were of a very severe type. It was there my attention was called to Tutt's Expectorant, and I confess my surprise at its wonderful power. During a practice of twenty years I have never known a medicine to act so promptly and with such happy effects. It instantly subdued the most violent fits of coughing, and invariably cured the disease in a few days. I cheerfully endorse it as the best lung medicine I ever used."

J. FRANCIS HAYWOOD, M.D.

A NEWSPAPER PUBLISHER WHITES
Office Evening News, Augusta, Ga.
Dr. Tutt's Dear Sir—My little son was attacked with pneumonia last winter, which left him with a violent cough that lasted till within a month since, for the cure of which I am indebted to your valuable Expectorant. I had tried most everything recommended, but none did good until I used your Expectorant, one bottle of which removed the cough entirely. With many thanks, I am yours truly,
JOHN M. WEIGLE.

HAD TERRIBLE NIGHT SWEATS.
Memphis, February 11, 1871.
Dr. Tutt's Dear Sir—I have been suffering for nearly two years with a severe cough. When I commenced taking your Expectorant I was reduced to one hundred and sixteen pounds in weight. I had tried almost everything; had terrible night sweats. I have taken half dozen bottles. The night sweats have left me, the cough has disappeared, and I have gained fifteen pounds in flesh. I recommend it to all my friends. With great respect,
OLIVER RICE.
